A welcome note from your instructor:
Over the years I’ve been teaching Watercolor for Continuing Studies, there has been a growing need for people who have taken beginning classes to paint in an open studio environment. Each person will work on what interests them. Class will focus on what you need when you need it, such as critique, problem-solving ideas and technique demos. We’ll learn from each other by sharing what each person is working on.

Tips for success:
Class is meant for anyone painting in watercolor on a regular basis. You don’t have to be an expert, but familiar with the basics of working with the medium. There is also a Watercolor Foundation class that is better suited to beginners.

Materials Fee: (Fees paid directly to instructor for course materials provided by instructor)

Supply List (Bring your own)
Note: All supplies are suggestions. Mention of a brand or retailer should not be considered UW-Madison endorsements. Students may make substitutions.

Required supplies:
- For the Arboretum space, please bring a table covering to protect the tables. A cloth or plastic one would work well.
- Given that class is for individuals already painting, you should bring to class what you need to start or finish a painting. For additional supplies, I will make suggestions for each person after I learn what your goals are.
